

Contents

Introduction and methods of interpretation	Page 1
1. Placement of the Doctrine of Right within the Metaphysics of Morals	3
2. Overall structure of the Commentary	5
3. Kant's geometric method	9
4. Kant's comments in his works preceding the Doctrine of Right of 1797	13
5. Achenwall's natural law	15
6. Additional authors on topics discussed in the Doctrine of Right	20
Chapter 1 The idea of the juridical state and the postulate of public law	23
1. The juridical state (Rechtsstaat), the postulate of public law, and the public nature of law and rights	24
2. The three formal criteria of the juridical state	32
3. The substantive criterion of a juridical state	39
Chapter 2 The state of nature and the three leges	44
1. The non-juridical state or the state of nature	45
2. The distinction between the lex iusti and the lex iuridica	52
3. The contrasts among the lex iusti , the lex iuridica , and the lex iustitiae	58
4. Kant's interpretation of the Ulpian formulae	62
5. A return to public justice	67

Appendix to Chapter 2 Iustitia tutatrix, iustitia commutativa, and iustitia distributiva and their differences	71
1. Kant's development of Hobbes' distinction between commutative and distributive justice	71
2. From the two- to the three-part division of public justice	74
Chapter 3 The right to freedom	77
1. The axiom of external freedom	77
2. The negative and positive aspects of internal freedom	84
3. The negative and positive aspects of external freedom	87
4. Closing comments on the positive aspect of external freedom	90
Chapter 4 The permissive law in the Doctrine of Right	94
1. Two concepts of a permissive law	95
2. The permissive law in the Doctrine of Right as a power-conferring norm	100
3. The power the permissive law confers	103
Chapter 5 The external mine and thine	107
1. Kant's concepts of possession	107
2. How is possession as mine possible?	111
3. Rights in rem to specific objects of choice	119
Chapter 6 Intelligible possession of land	122
1. How is original acquisition of a piece of land possible?	123
2. The original right to a place on the earth	126
3. The original community of the land	129
4. The originally united will	132
5. The requirement to divide the land as a synthetic principle of law a priori	135
6. The postulate of public law	138

Contents	ix
Chapter 7 The “state in the idea”	143
1. The state in the idea and the juridical state	143
2. The distinction of three state powers	146
3. Practical syllogisms of reason and the role of the executive	149
4. Kant’s comparison of the three powers to the propositions in a practical syllogism	157
5. The doctrine of the three state dignities	161
6. The separation of powers	163
 Chapter 8 The state in reality	 168
1. The original contract	169
2. The forms of state and the “representative system of the people”	175
3. Revolution in the Doctrine of Right	181
4. Reforms in the Doctrine of Right	184
 Chapter 9 International and cosmopolitan law	 188
1. The permission to coerce others to enter a juridical nation state	189
2. The duty states have to enter a juridical state of nation states	194
3. The nature of a juridical state of nation states	196
4. Cosmopolitan law	205
5. Security for the mine and thine in a state of peace	211
 Chapter 10 The “idea of public law” and its limits	 215
1. Kant’s terminology on the distinction between commutative and distributive justice	215
2. Kant’s treatment of the “four cases” in §§36–40 of the Doctrine of Right	219
3. On rights that have no judge	226
 Chapter 11 Contract law I. Why must I keep my promise?	 232
1. The moral capacity to have a contractual claim	233
2. A contractual claim as a universal right	236
3. Acquiring a contractual claim in reality	239

4. Freedom of contract and its limits	240
5. Why must I keep my promise?	243
Chapter 12 Contract law II. Kant's table of contracts	245
1. The three "pure" forms of contract	247
2. The twelve aspects highlighted in the table	249
3. The completeness of the table of contracts	258
Chapter 13 Criminal punishment	261
1. Achenwall's theory of criminal punishment	262
2. Kant's reasoning behind the criminal law	264
3. "The criminal law is a categorical imperative"	267
4. Punishment in the juridical state	270
5. The amount of punishment: the principle of retribution	272
6. The death penalty and Kant's position on Beccaria	275
Chapter 14 The human being as a person	279
1. The homo phaenomenon	280
2. The homo noumenon	282
3. On the relationship between homo noumenon and homo phaenomenon	285
4. Imputation of human actions	290
Appendix I to Chapter 14: On the logic of "ought" implies "can"	294
1. "'Ought' implies 'can'" in the prospective application of a rule	294
2. "'Ought' implies 'can'" in the retrospective application of a rule	296
Appendix II to Chapter 14: The system of rules of imputation	298
1. "Merit" and "moral culpability"	299
2. The consequences of my action	301
3. The degree of imputability to merit or to demerit	306