

Table of Contents

Preface	page xi
Acknowledgements	xxi
List of abbreviations	xxii
Further abbreviations	xxv
Part A	1
1 Jurisprudence, globalisation and the discipline of law: a new general jurisprudence	3
1.1 Clean water	3
1.2 Western traditions of academic law	5
1.3 Jurisprudence	8
1.4 The significance of ‘globalisation’	13
1.5 ‘General jurisprudence’	18
1.6 Jurisprudence, legal philosophy, and empirical legal studies	21
1.7 Legal positivism	25
2 Analytical jurisprudence in a global context	32
2.1 Introduction: conceptual questions	32
2.2 Analytical jurisprudence	35
2.3 Four case studies	45
2.4 Continuities between conceptual analysis and empirical enquiries	54
2.5 Conclusion	60
3 Mapping law: Families, civilisations, cultures and traditions	63
3.1 Introduction	63
3.2 Four responses to the question: ‘What is law?’	64
3.3 Mapping law	67
3.4 Families, civilisations, cultures and traditions	76
4 Constructing conceptions of law: Beyond Hart, Tamanaha and Llewellyn	88
4.1 Tamanaha on Hart	88
4.2 Refining Llewellyn: the law-jobs theory	103
4.3 Tamanaha and Llewellyn compared	106

4.4	'Mapping' legal phenomena from a global perspective: A flexible working conception of law	116
5	Normative jurisprudence, utilitarianism, and theories of justice	122
5.1	Introduction	122
5.2	The Western heritage	123
5.3	Positivism, universalisability, universalism, and relativism	126
5.4	Classical utilitarianism: Jeremy Bentham	133
5.5	Peter Singer: a modern Benthamite	143
5.6	Modified utilitarianism	149
5.7	Theories of justice: Rawls and Pogge	153
6	Human rights as moral, political and legal rights	173
6.1	The only game in town? Human rights theory: five perspectives	173
6.2	Human rights law and morality	178
6.3	Human rights law as 'universal': moderate scepticism	183
6.4	Human rights as moral rights: comprehensive and selective scepticism	185
6.5	Comprehensive sceptics	186
6.6	Selective criticism and the rhetoric of rights	199
7	Meeting the challenges to human rights: Griffin, Tasioulas and Sen	202
7.1	Introduction: challenges and concessions	202
7.2	James Griffin: a dualist substantive theory	206
7.3	John Tasioulas: a pluralist substantive theory	209
7.4	Discourse theories	217
8	Empirical dimensions of law and justice	225
8.1	Introduction	225
8.2	A note on terminology	226
8.3	The historical context	230
8.4	Berlin, 2007	237
8.5	The implications of globalisation: social theory and the transnationalisation of empirical legal studies	242
8.6	Comparative empirical legal studies	244
8.7	Qualitative comparative legal studies	245
8.8	Quantitative comparative legal studies	251
8.9	An empirical science of law?	258
8.10	Conclusion	262
	Part B	267
9	Diffusion of law: A global perspective	269
9.1	Mapping law: a naïve model of diffusion	269
9.2	Some landmarks in the study of diffusion of law	273

9.3	A global perspective: diffusion, levels of law, and interlegality	275
9.4	Beyond the naïve model: some counter-assumptions	277
9.5	Conclusion	291
10	Surface law	293
10.1	Sophie's problem	293
10.2	Five case studies	296
10.3	Meaning and referents of 'surface law'	316
10.4	Some health warnings	318
10.5	Conclusion	320
11	Is law important? Law and the Millennium Development Goals	323
11.1	Introduction	323
11.2	'Law and development': An historical excursus	326
11.3	Contemporary perceptions of the role of law in development: five models	330
11.4	The Millennium Development Goals (MDGs)	348
11.5	The Millennium Development Goals and Uganda: A case-study	355
11.6	Non-state law: The forgotten factor	357
11.7	Conclusion	360
12	The significance of non-state law	362
12.1	Taking non-state law seriously	362
12.2	Four concerns	366
13	Human rights: Southern voices	376
13.1	Introduction	376
13.2	Francis Mading Deng	378
13.3	Abdullahi Ahmed An-Na'im	393
13.4	A realist and materialist interpretation: Yash Ghai	406
13.5	Upendra Baxi	424
13.6	Four Southern voices	438
14	Conclusion	443
	Bibliography	452
	Index	505

The following text can be found online at www.cambridge.org/twining

15 Some basic concepts

16 Elusive isms: Instrumentalism, pluralism, scientism, realism

17 Law teaching as a vocation

Appendices