

Contents

List of abbreviations	xiii
------------------------------	------

I INTRODUCTION	1
II THE IFIs' ORIGINS AND CONTEMPORARY FUNCTIONS	9
The IBRD	9
The IDA	11
The evolution of development thinking at the Bank	14
What role for human rights?	19
The IMF	25
The role, policies and facilities of the Fund today	29
Surveillance	32
Financial assistance	36
1. Financial policies	36
2. Financial facilities	38
Conditionality	45
1. Legal basis for conditionality	46
2. Content of conditionality policies	48
What role for human rights?	51
III THE IMPORTANCE OF THE QUESTION: COMMENTS ON THE HUMAN RIGHTS IMPACTS OF THE IFIs' POLICIES AND ACTIVITIES	53
Preliminary remarks	53
Causation in context	53
The question of Bank and Fund influence	56
Models of human rights influence	61
The positive side of the human rights ledger	63
The IMF	63
The Bank	64
The negative side of the ledger	66
Structural adjustment generally	68
The World Bank and major infrastructure projects	72
The legitimacy deficit	74
A bias towards authoritarian regimes?	83
The PRSP: 'Old wine in a new bottle?'	87
Pragmatism v principle: lessons from the Indonesian experience	91
Fractured situation analysis: the compartmentalisation problem	96

SSN's: targeting and other problems	100
Social capital depreciation and the commodification of social relationships	101
Privatisation, internationalisation, and the 'empty shell of democracy'	104
International peace and security—the cases of the former Yugoslavia and Rwanda	106
Summary—the IFIs' human rights impacts and influence	111
 IV TO WHAT EXTENT CAN THE WORLD BANK AND IMF DEAL WITH HUMAN RIGHTS? A BRIEF EXPLORATION OF THEIR LEGAL MANDATES	 113
Legal interpretation of the IFIs' mandates	115
'An art, not a science'	115
Guiding principles and interpretative methodology	116
How vital an issue is the 'legal mandate' question in a practical sense?	122
The World Bank	122
The IMF	123
Issues common to the Bank and Fund	124
Relationship agreements with the United Nations	124
The IFIs as subjects of international law	126
Obligations arising from the U.N. Charter	126
Scope of human rights obligations	129
A critical review of unofficial IMF rebuttals	133
Inherent sources of authority: the 'implied powers' doctrine	138
The reverse side of the coin: the IFIs' as normative actors	142
The meaning of the 'political prohibition' in the Bank's Articles	149
The Portuguese and South African loan controversies	150
The mandate expands	152
The Bank's mandate revisited: the political prohibition and the 'direct and obvious' test	153
Consistency of human rights principles with instrumental development rationales	154
Human rights and social policy initiatives	156
Comparative initiatives and procedures in the environmental area	157
Human rights of indigenous peoples	158
Human rights elements within HIV/AIDs strategies	159
Breadth of mandate on issues affecting children	160
Judicial reform, press freedom, and other incremental human rights innovations	164
Inter-agency comparison: the Inter-American Development Bank (IADB)	166

Travaux préparatoires	168
Scope of inherent authority within the Fund's mandate—an 'implied powers' analysis	170
A critical appraisal of some standard disclaimers	170
Existing practice concerning human rights related issues	174
1. Governance	175
2. Equity	178
3. Promoting the role of women	179
4. Environmental issues	181
5. Lifting the veil on the Fund's broad range of 'behind the scenes' activities—labour rights, political prisoners, ILO conventions, environmental and indigenous peoples' issues, and East Timor	182
The year 2000 and beyond: increasingly muddled waters	183
Other relevant factors for both Bank and Fund	186
An appropriate policy environment at the national level	186
Congruence of human rights with desirable elements of anti-corruption strategies	187
Private pressure over human rights violations in East Timor	190
Other country-specific cases	190
Conclusions	192
 V IMPEDIMENTS TO HUMAN RIGHTS INTEGRATION	 195
Preliminary remarks	195
Institutional and cultural barriers within the Bank	196
Institutional and cultural barriers within the Fund	201
Other institutional and disciplinary barriers	202
Inter-disciplinary clashes—'trade-offs v. absolutism?'	203
The functionalist objection	205
'Human rights is bad for business'	206
Double standards	207
Empirical justifications for evolving mandates	208
Limitations of conditionality as a legitimate and viable human rights vehicle	209
Stifling of progressive local initiatives?	211
Cultural relativism in context	213
The problem of applicability of human rights to non-state actors	216
Fungibility of aid for development	219
Concluding comments	220
 VI AN AGENDA FOR REFORM	 221
Introductory remarks	221
Decks chairs on the Titanic: Structural prerequisites to policy reforms	222

The demand for human rights policies	234
Accountability and evaluation in human rights terms: The quest for relevant indicators and benchmarks	236
Tailoring and local ownership	243
Programmatic relevance of economic, social and cultural rights as human rights	245
Education for all—a role for the CRC and ICESCR	253
Participation in human rights terms	255
Institutional implications of the PRSP process	260
Integrating human rights within social impact analysis and social assessment	264
Social impact analysis	265
Social assessment	272
Caveats on privatisation	277
The role of human rights in the Bank’s policy on child labour	278
Recognition of relevant United Nations decision-making bodies	279
Interactions with the human rights treaty bodies	282
Expanded communication and modes of cooperation human rights NGOs	278
Interactions with the OHCHR	287
 VII CONCLUDING REMARKS	 295
 Annex: List of Interviewees	 301
Bibliography	307
Index	349